FALLEN WARRIORS
Wyoming has a strong tradition of military service. Men and women from the Cowboy State have served their nation proudly from the Spanish-American War to the present Global War on Terror. Some have given as said by Abraham Lincoln, “their last full measure of devotion.”

To honor the fallen, the Wyoming Veterans Commission created the Fallen Warrior Memorial Project. Computer kiosks shared information and photographs from service members who died in service after 2001. For almost a decade those kiosks traveled across the state. Now it is available online.

Please take some time to learn about Wyoming’s fallen heroes.

Major Bryan G. Adrian died February 15, 2006, at Lackland AFB in Texas. MAJ Adrian, 41, was taking part in water confidence training as part of a Combat Rescue Officers Course when he died. He died during the seventh week of the eight-week indoctrination course. He lost consciousness while participating in a 50-meter underwater swim. The accident was under investigation until the cause of death was determined to be a pre-existing heart condition known as Long Q-T Syndrome. Long Q-T Syndrome results from an abnormal delay in the heart’s electrical conduction ability, which affects the heart’s ability to pump blood. The five factors that significantly contributed to MAJ Adrian’s death included: the strenuous exercise of the PJ/CRO course induced by the 50-meter underwater swim, the major’s use of dietary supplements and over the counter medications, Adrian’s unyielding determination to complete the course, the rescuers’ problems securing an airway, and delay in attaching the defibrillator. MAJ Adrian was permanently assigned to the 176th Wing of the Alaska National Guard. Maj. Adrian was temporarily assigned to the 342nd Training Squadron at Lackland Air Force Base, Texas, during training to be a combat rescue officer. He had been at Lackland since Dec. 5, attending training.
